MAKING HISTORY

GALVESTON CHAMBER CELEBRATES 175 YEARS AND COUNTING

Postcard featuring bathing beauty mascot Miss Galvie Stone, circa 1915.

Whatever you are doing today in Galveston likely has roots in some visionary action the Galveston Regional Chamber of Commerce initiated or supported.

In the past 175 years, the Chamber has touched almost every aspect of life on the island — business, infrastructure, education, health, tourism and city-wide celebrations.

Its history is interwoven with the life of the city, its people and its prosperity.

“There is hardly a phase of community life we haven’t touched in our work over the past 175 years,” Chamber president Gina Spagnola said. “And, we’re just getting started. We are excited about the future and proud of our past contributions.”

Chamber members established the island’s first library, a precursor to Rosenberg; they created the first committee to investigate and determine the causes of the yellow fever epidemic; and it was the Chamber president who campaigned for iron-front commercial buildings to exude prosperity.

Following the 1900 Storm, it was the Chamber members who worked to rebuild businesses and to literally rebuild the island. They pioneered emergency response and now, they share that knowledge and they offer hands-on assistance when a natural disaster strikes another municipality.

“The Chamber strives to support, inspire and spread the word about Galveston in all that we do,” Spagnola said. “When the organization began, its chief priority was to regulate tariffs, but we’ve evolved into so much more.”

The Galveston Chamber of Commerce was launched on Feb. 3, 1845, by decree of the Ninth Republic of Texas Congress on the last chilly day of its gathering at Washington-on-the-Brazos. It was requested by Texas Adjunct General Hugh McLeod in order to establish uniform and equitable charges for goods entering the Port of Galveston. Tariffs on the island ran as high as 36 percent and standardization was needed to create a more stable business environment.

The Chamber had been informally acting since 1838 and was one of the first such organizations in the new Republic.

Members of the original board included Samuel May Williams, president, John. F. Snyder, Michel B. Menard, Albert Ball, Capt. Lent M. Hitchcock, Charles Power, Col. Thomas F. McKinney and Gen. Hugh McLeod.

WASHINGTON HOTEL BUILDING

The Galveston Regional Chamber of Commerce's current office at 2228 Mechanic St. is located in the Washington Hotel Building. Built in 1873 for prominent Galveston merchant John Parker Davie, the original structure operated as the Cosmopolitan Hotel until Davie sold the business in 1878, according to the Texas Historic Sites Atlas. It was renamed the Washington Hotel after an earlier business by that name was destroyed in a fire in 1877, according to the website. After several changes in ownership, the building fell into disrepair until George and Cynthia Mitchell acquired it in 1982. Renovations were underway when an electrical fire during Hurricane Alicia in 1983 caused the building to burn, according to "Galveston's Historic Downtown and Strand District" by Denise Alexander. The Mitchells in 1987 funded the reconstruction of the building, which was constructed to match the exterior appearance of the 1873 building, according to the Atlas. Mitchell Historic Properties, a chamber member, manages the property today.

REPUBLIC OF TEXAS.

AN ACT

To create a Body Corporate and Politic, by the name of the Galveston Chamber of Commerce.

Whereas, a large number of the merchants of the city of Galveston have petitioned that a charter be granted them creating a Chamber of Commerce, and have set forth that such an institution is much required by the mercantile community as tending to diminish litigation, and to establish uniform and equitable charges, and considering that the establishment of a Chamber of Commerce may tend to the general advantage of the citizens of this Republic, as well as to the furtherance of the commercial interest.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Republic of Texas in Congress assembled, That Samuel M. Williams, J. T. Doswell, R. M. Hannay, John H. Illies, George B. Innes, L. M. Hitchcock, Jr., John S. Sydnor, D. H. Klaener, John H. Bennett, M. B. Menard, S. Van Sickles, Thomas Bates, H. A. Cobb, E. Kauffman, Matthew Hopkins, Henry A. Williams, E. Martin, E. O. Lynch, J. A. Doe, Henry Hubbell, Thos. F. McKinney, A. Ball, Charles Power, H. McLeod, merchants of the city of Galveston, their associates and their successors be, and they are hereby declared to be a body corporate and politic, by the name of the Galveston Chamber of Commerce.

Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, That the said Chamber of Commerce shall have all the powers, privileges and immunities properly belonging to such bodies, to enable them to carry into effect the foregoing provisions, with authority to make and adopt all rules, regulations and by-laws for their guidance as they may deem proper.

Sec. 3. Be it further enacted, That this act of incorporation shall be in force, for and during the space of twenty years from the passage thereof, and take effect from and after its passage.

Approved, February 3d, 1845.

"Imagine the high hopes of these 23 Galveston merchants who were named in the original charter to direct this new Chamber of Commerce," Spagnola said. "They couldn't have foreseen what an important role the chamber would have in the direction and development of the city. They were an international group: American, Italian, German, Swiss, French and others, who had chosen to relocate in a new land with new possibilities. They had enormous energy and enthusiasm."

When Texas joined the United States on Dec. 29, 1845, the Chamber's role in city life continued to be central to its growth and prosperity. As a group, they advocated for a railroad line, a wagon bridge and a series of lifeboat stations on the Gulf to save hapless sailors who had fallen from the cavalcade of international ships, which entered the port daily.

A well-positioned deep-water port on the Gulf Coast, Galveston was the largest city in Texas by 1845 with a population of about 4,000 people. By 1855, the population had doubled.

By 1857, French traveler Martin Maris found Galveston to exude a cosmopolitan atmosphere, utterly unexpected in frontier Texas. He talked with islanders who hailed from France, Spain, Ireland, Italy and Germany, and determined that "Galveston has the most heterogeneous population

I have ever encountered in any city."

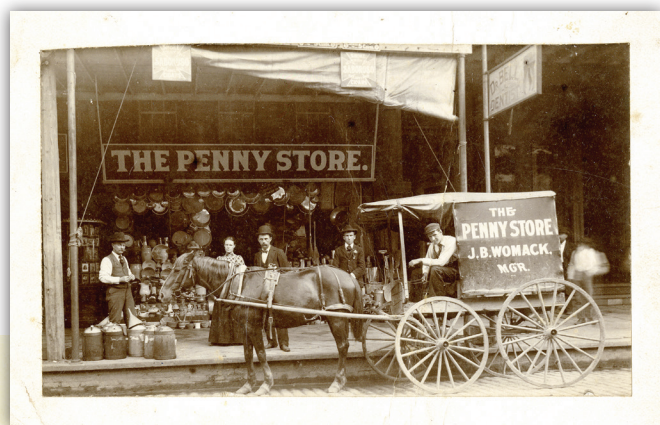

The population was growing rapidly and by the late 1850s, there were an estimated 7,000 residents. Another European visitor at the time observed the citizens of Galveston enjoyed "an average quantum of intelligence above that to be found in most cities, and among the abler persons, some decided talent." He described riding in a carriage down "clean and spacious streets," passing a number of churches, a fine market house, a town hall and offices for the municipal court. He saw fine brick buildings and wooden frame structures in "fine architectural taste."

He found the shops were stocked with "every article demanded by the necessities and luxuries of man." Leading citizens of the city, he wrote, "lived in great comfort enjoying the most delightful residences among surpassingly beautiful gardens." Every variety of tropical shrub, flower and tree seemed to grow with vigor and rapidity, and the oleanders were loaded with fresh and beautiful bloom."

"While it is true that the Chamber's broad mission was to serve mercantile interests and promote business, from the start they were able to see a greater vision," Spagnola said. "They believed business prosperity depended on having a healthy, educated community. They were advocates for improved public health, better sanitation, broader public education, paved roads, greater access to the world beyond the island with rail and wagon bridges, and a higher quality of life for the city's inhabitants."

The strategy improved life on the island and business did prosper.

By 1880, the island supported 530 businesses, 147 saloons, 10 hotels and a combined wholesale and retail trade valued at $30 million. That year the port shipped 490,921 bales of cotton and received almost a half million dollars in imports. Manufacturing had nearly doubled over the previous decade; 172 establishments employed 649 workers and produced products valued at over $2 million. Galveston was on its way to becoming the Queen City of the Gulf, the cultural center of Texas. Arguably its most enthusiastic and effective advocate was the Chamber.

In the 1890s, voters selected Galveston over Houston as the location for the first medical school in Texas, and the University of Texas Medical Department opened in 1891. Transportation improvements continued to promote growth on the island. The Galveston and Western Railway on Galveston Island was completed in the 1890s and CJ and NC Jones' Gulf and Interstate Railway was chartered in 1894, linking Bolivar Point and Beaumont. By the end of the decade, a wagon bridge has been built to the mainland.

GALVESTON'S FIRST LIBRARY

The storied edifice of Rosenberg Library is well-known to many Galvestonians. The building was dedicated in 1904, which means even lifelong islanders in their 90s cannot remember a time without Rosenberg Library.

But it was not Galveston's first library.

Galveston's first library, the Galveston Mercantile Library, was a project of the Chamber.

One of the library's founders said "no effort will be spared to make the reading room attractive, and adequate to meet the wants of our city."

The library was located on the second floor of the Hurlbut Building, which no longer stands today, in the 2200 block of Postoffice Street.

When it opened in January 1871, the library's collection included 2,000 books, all donated, as well as newspapers, periodicals, technical journals and reviews. The library also was set up as a depository for state documents, providing the heritage of historical preservation Rosenberg continues today.

Certain rules were established by the committee for the running of the library. Dues were $10 a year but were available at half-price for Chamber members. If a subscriber donated $100, he became a life member. Subscribers could invite their friends to utilize the reading room, but would be barred from using the library if their dues went unpaid for 12 months.

Similar institutions only allowed men to be subscribers, but the Galveston library's charter suggested that anyone who could pay the subscription could use the library.

Another progressive policy of the library, the Chamber was dedicated to ensuring the library was a non-biased institution and limited book purchases featuring any one religion too prominently. Clergy members were not allowed to work as librarians or sit on the library committee.

The first librarian at Galveston Mercantile Library was Emily F. Carnes. Her starting salary was $650 a year. Mollie E. Moore, a famous singer in Texas at the time, was offered the position first, but turned it down because her father was ill and she had young brothers.

Carnes accepted the post, which kept her busy, even in the library's initial months.

1900 STORM

For Chamber members and for all of Galveston, the first decade of the 20th century centered around rebuilding the island after the 1900 Storm.

Prominent Galvestonians, many of whom were involved in the Chamber, came together at the organization's offices in The Tremont Hotel, the day after the storm. Those present elected a committee to manage the recovery process — Galveston Mayor Walter C. Jones was named chairman of the Central Relief Committee; banker John Sealy, who had been serving as Chamber treasurer, was put in charge of finances; and former Chamber president Morris Lasker was put in charge of correspondence.

Working together, the committee took on the most pressing needs of the community and, as news of the city's plight spread, reinforcements reached the island.

Donations both small and large came from across the country and around the world, in excess of $1.25 million.

Clara Barton arrived with a team from the American Red Cross and stayed for two months, charged with bringing food and clothing to survivors.

Besides orchestrating the city clean-up and restoring utilities, the Central Relief Committee paid for the construction of 483 new houses, and offered financial support for the repair or rebuilding of 1,114 houses.

The storm halted the island's economy for a time. Many businesses decided to move inland for greater safety. As a result, Galveston dropped to the fourth largest city in Texas with only 37,788, behind San Antonio, Houston and Dallas.

As Galveston began to rebound, of great importance was how the city was perceived in the press, according to a thorough review of the Chamber's activities in 1903 by Chamber secretary J.H. Johnston.

"It gives me great pleasure," he wrote, "to report the condition of the Chamber of Commerce is very satisfactory, indeed."

"The city as a whole has enjoyed a year of possibly unexampled prosperity. The business of the port has surpassed all previous records in Galveston now stands next to New York in the volume in value of its exports. However, this general question has been treated so fully through the medium of the press from time to time that I hardly deem it necessary for me to devote any great amount of space to a repetition of the very complimentary notices which we have been getting through the papers published not only United States, but in many foreign countries as well. I believe I can truthfully say that Galveston is today the best advertised city in the United States of America, and of its size, in the entire known world. This advertisement which she is getting on account of the great works now underway at this port is, in the end, bound to bring about results of the most practical character."

CHAMBER'S REBIRTH

In 1911, the Chamber merged with the Galveston Business League and the Galveston Publicity Committee to form the Galveston Commercial Association; a $40,000 central fund was established for the new organization.

Chief among their focuses were traffic and commerce, publicity and the cotton carnival.

"It is probably in the field of effort, of the traffic and commerce committee that the greatest number of direct results that the practical man loves to ferret out and place his finger upon in an indication that work has been worthwhile, have been brought about," Chamber President Morris Stern said.

Along the way, there was also room for fun. The Chamber sponsored a Cotton Carnival, the island's long-lived Mardi Gras celebration, and the International Pageant of Pulchritude, also known as Miss Universe Beauty Contest.

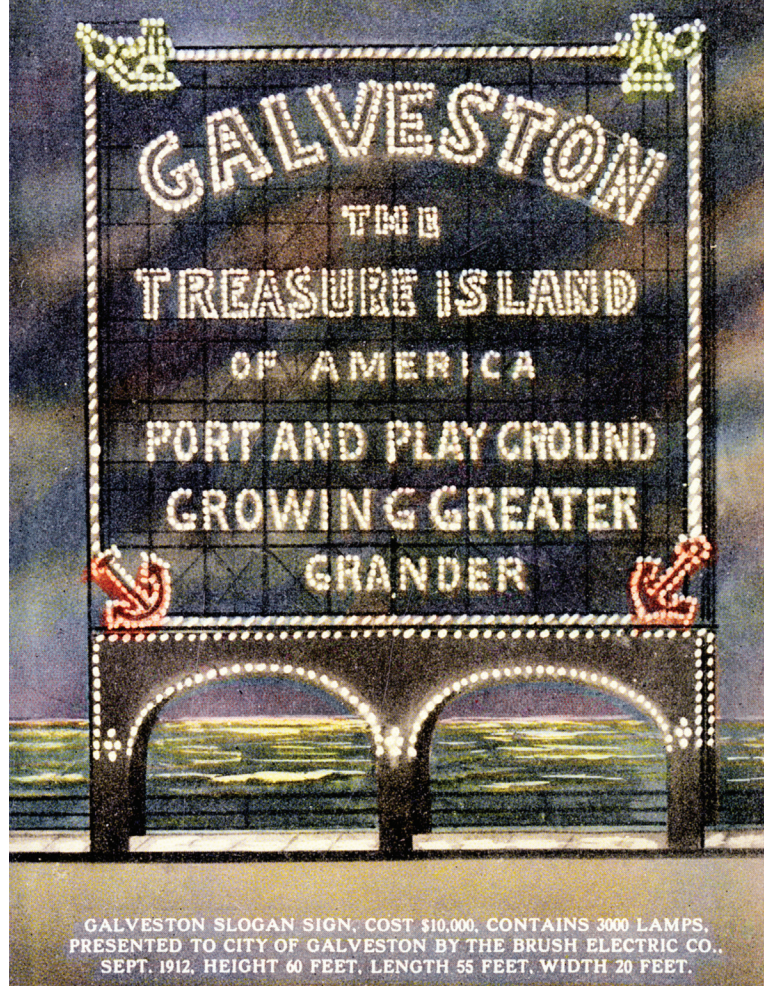

World War I, as in other ports across the country, caused some problems with commercial shipping, but they were relatively minor compared to those experienced during the Mexican revolution, which caused all major shipments to be rerouted to Cuba. After the war ended in 1918, commerce in Galveston rebounded quickly and even boomed.

World War I did bring a halt to the Chamber's popular early 20th century event, the Cotton Carnival. It was held at the now-demolished City Auditorium, which sat where Menard Park is now. An extension of the auditorium, The Cotton Palace featured displays relating to cotton and cotton products such as cotton bales from various nations as well as art exhibits. Along with Galveston Auditorium the Cotton Palace was demolished during 1920.

FREE STATE OF GALVESTON

Though it was built to protect Galveston from encroaching hurricanes, the seawall ended up safeguarding the city from a different kind of ruin: the crash of 1929.

By then, the boulevard along the seawall had become the island's epicenter of tourism — an industry that buoyed the local economy through the Great Depression.

The Chamber advertised the beachside avenue as “Galveston’s counterpart to the famous Boardwalk of Atlantic City.” Bathhouses and amusement piers ran for five miles along the seawall. Investors expanded Murdoch’s Pier to include a casino, a bathhouse and a restaurant. There was also the Crystal Palace, a compound of attractions — a dance pavilion, a restaurant, a penny arcade and an indoor saltwater pool, which was advertised as the largest in the South.

Mirroring its early efforts to enhance post-storm Galveston, the Chamber helped erect a 60-foot electric sign, which brightly proclaimed: “Galveston: The Treasure Island of America.”

Thirty years after becoming notorious for its misfortunes, during the Great Depression, “unemployment was something islanders only read about.”

There were no food riots or demonstrations and, for most, business remained stable. Some Chamber members even reported financial gains, including Chamber member American National.

The former Wall Street of the Southwest was reinventing itself in the first half of the 20th century, evolving into the “Free State of Galveston.”

Fixtures of this new and booming business community were Sam and Rosario Maceo, immigrants from Sicily who built some of Galveston’s most popular entertainment venues during this time.

Together with his brother, Sam Maceo, a member of the Chamber’s amusements and entertainment committee in 1934, ran The Grotto, which later became the Sui Jen — and later still the world-famous lounge, The Balinese Room.

“The brothers from Sicily had a primary instinct for laissez faire, and they always took care of business first,” according to the book “Galveston Chronicles: The Queen City of the Gulf.” “Crime rates remained low, at least statistically. There was no unemployment. And everyone made money. The banking and insurance businesses had never been better. The Moodys’ hotels were full, even in the winter. Without the Maceos, it seemed, the island might have dried up and blown away.”

WAR YEARS

In the decades following the Great Depression, which had a surprisingly small impact on Galveston compared to the rest of the country, a significant contributor to Galveston's economy involved the military. In the 1940s, Fort Crockett, the Army Air Base at Scholes Field, the Navy Section Base on Pelican Island, Camp Wallace and the blimp base at Hitchcock all fueled the local economy, as did military shipments at the port and shipbuilding. And, the influx of military personnel — soldiers and sailors — provided a steady stream of customers for area businesses.

The Chamber's 1943 program was explicitly organized around the war effort.

"Galveston's first concern is aiding our nation in winning the war as quickly as possible. The Galveston Chamber of Commerce will continue making war activities the most important phase of its program," Chamber president CF Evans said.

Their plan included maintaining close working relationships with army, navy, maritime and other government agencies in this area, giving full cooperation in whatever ways such services can and should be rendered; giving specialized assistance and cooperation to business firms and citizens on problems caused by government wartime regulations, such as priorities, price control, transportation, allocation of industrial materials, etc.; doing everything possible to expedite housing program for war workers through conversions of VA-buildings and houses, new construction, etc. under management plans and regulations, and the establishment of a housing center, a temporary agency for those seeking relief from the war; promote wartime training programs.

FIRST PLEASURE PIER

A brochure distributed by the Chamber in the 1940s reads: "Visit this isle of romance ... A city of beauty with many appeals."

Forty years after the 1900 Storm decimated the island city, E. Sid Holliday — the publicity and convention director and later the manager of the Chamber — made a push to rebrand the island as a premier tourist destination.

One of his most notable achievements in this capacity, though not initially successful, was opening the first incarnation of what is now known as the Historic Pleasure Pier.

During the late 1930s, the tourism industry was flailing in Galveston. Then-mayor Brantly Harris had an idea, one he hoped would buoy the city's economy: a beachfront amusement pier akin to the one in Atlantic City.

The pair took their proposition to Washington D.C., pitching it as a perk for service members stationed at Galveston.

When Harris died in 1942, the city proposed a resolution that would name the pier for him.

LEADERSHIP IN LATER YEARS

In the decades following World War II, Galveston saw a period of growth and diversification, and the Chamber was directly involved in many of the positive changes.

One of those was creating educational opportunities on the island. In 1958, the Chamber established a committee to investigate the prospect of establishing a state maritime academy and to convince the State of Texas to fund it. After four hard-fought years, the committee finally persuaded the Texas legislature to pass the bill that would bankroll the venture and on Feb. 24, 1962, the Texas Maritime Academy was established.

As the 1960s drew to a close, the Chamber's program of work focused on one of the most pressing concerns facing the people of Galveston: housing. The organization was focusing specifically on advocating for the development of more low- and middle-income housing.

"Galveston does not and cannot get the full benefit of the economic development which is here and is coming if the city does not have housing facilities," the forward for the 1969 program read.

A number of studies were conducted on the issue, which found two basic reasons for high housing costs: First, land was expensive and, second, the lack of volume in construction forced unit prices up.

In 1969, a housing action force, comprised of both members and non-members of the Chamber, was created to identify problems and define solutions. Jim Yarbrough was named to head the program.

Issues related to housing featured prominently in the Chamber's 1969 program of work. Their goals included: continue efforts to secure more low- and middle-income housing in Galveston; assist in program to eliminate substandard housing; continue efforts to have an urban renewal referendum; expand efforts to make available more land for development; continue efforts to have an urban renewal referendum; expand efforts to make available more development in the West End of the island, on Pelican Island and in the East End Flats.

ROSENBERG LIBRARY

In the 1980s, the Chamber started the Leadership Galveston program to give training and support to young men and women who were committed to the city's progress. Guidance of the program shifted to Galveston College for a time but is once again being led by the Chamber.

The program is critical in that it creates a pipeline of future leaders for the community, develops core leadership competencies and provides a broad introduction to social, economic, business and political issues in the Galveston area. Boasting more than 500 graduates, the dynamic eight-month program teaches participants about what makes Galveston go — from its unique economy to its largesse of educational institutions to its diverse culture and attractive lifestyle. Graduates of the program have gone on to become community leaders, and include top executives and elected officials at the city and state levels.

FOCUSED ON PROGRESS

In the 21st century, the Chamber's commitment has expanded to a broad slate of carefully planned, action-driven programs to promote economic development, community development, education initiatives, public affairs and legislative issues.

"The chamber's mission is to promote and advocate for businesses and their ability to continue to do business and that's what we've done for 175 years," Spagnola said.

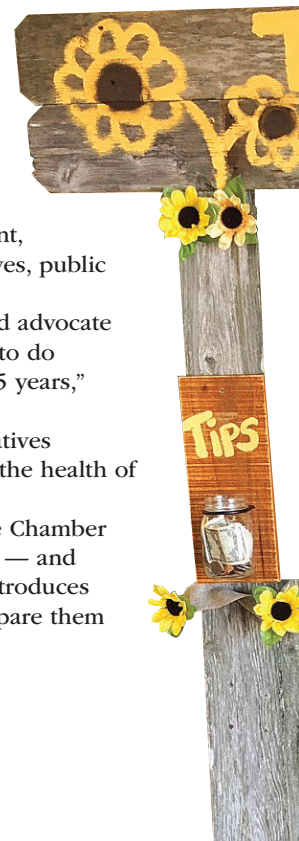

The Chamber today leads dozens of initiatives designed to improve the quality of life and the health of regional businesses now and in the future.

For the region's young entrepreneurs, the Chamber launched Lemonade Day in 2012. It's a free — and highly popular educational initiative that introduces youth to entrepreneurship and skills to prepare them for both business and life.

Through the fun, hands-on Lemonade Day program, kids in kindergarten through high school are empowered to start their own business — a lemonade stand.

"Lemonade Day Galveston County is the perfect collaboration of business and education," Spagnola said.

The program teaches youngsters to set goals, develop a business plan, establish a budget, seek investors, provide customer service, market their product and the importance of being charitable.

"With their profit, area youth learn to spend some, save some and share some of their money by giving back to our community," Spagnola said.

There isn't just profit to be gained, according to Joseph Collins, who participated in the event for seven years.

"Making money through Lemonade Day has been great, but making lifetime memories has been better," he said.

In 2018, Collins helped pioneer a satellite event — Lemonade City — at Stringfellow Orchards in Hitchcock.

"Those hot, sunny days presented an opportunity to provide my customers with a thirst quencher that has been around since at least 1857," Collins said. "I was honored to be appointed as the first mayor."

Spagnola believes the life skills learned in preparation for Lemonade Day will make a lasting, positive impact across the region.

"Together, we are empowering today's youth to become tomorrow's entrepreneurs and sparking ideas for new businesses that will fuel growth in the Galveston area for years to come," she said.

Other successful Chamber initiatives include: Adventures in Maritime Careers; the young professionals' group, C-Crewe; and the annual Galveston Women's Conference, Mind, Body, Spirit — now in its 13th year. This inspirational conference brings hundreds of women to Galveston and celebrates the leadership and service of women across the region. Former keynote speakers include actress Marilu Henner; Aisha Tyler, host of CBS' The Talk; Elizabeth Gilbert, bestselling author of "Eat, Pray, Love"; and former First Lady Laura Bush. ★

Actress and author Marilu Henner talks about her childhood during the Galveston Regional Chamber of Commerce's 2017 Celebrating Women: Mind, Body, Spirit Women's Conference at the Moody Gardens Convention Center. Henner was the keynote speaker at the conference designed to inspire and empower attendees.

TAKING HURRICANES BY STORM

CHAMBER ACTIVE IN REBUILDING
ISLAND THROUGHOUT HISTORY

Debris in Postoffice Street after the 1900 Storm.

H. N. MORRIS
GALVESTON, TEX.

For decades, people on Galveston Island never spoke of the 1900 Storm.

"The folks that survived the storm were sort of like people who survived a war," former state Sen. Babe Schwartz recalled. "No chamber of commerce wants to talk about the worst tragedy in the history of the United States where 6,000 to 8,000 people died on this little ol' island."

Though they might not have wanted to talk about it, the Chamber, which was reincorporated in 1902, included as part of its mission statement "to preserve and disseminate information relative to commerce and industrial affairs."

Efficient "dissemination" was particularly important to the island when it came to information about approaching hurricanes. In the decades following the 1900 Storm, the Chamber became an integral part of improving the weather alert system, not just for the business community, but for the whole of Galveston.

The first office of the National Weather Service in Texas — and one of the first in the country — was established in Galveston on April 19, 1871. It was initially their responsibility to issue alerts, but their system was not equipped to handle the rapidly increasing number of households with telephones.

In 1900, there were nearly 600,000 phones in Bell's telephone system. Five years later, that number had nearly quadrupled. By 1910, there were 5.8 million phones in the system and in 1915 the transcontinental telephone line began operating.

When a major hurricane threatened the Gulf Coast in 1919, staff members of the weather bureau were overwhelmed with calls from anxious Galveston residents.

Times were changing, and the alert system was clearly in need of an update.

"The folks that survived the storm were sort of like people who survived a war. No chamber of commerce wants to talk about the worst tragedy in the history of the United States where 6,000 to 8,000 people died on this little ol' island."

FORMER STATE SEN. BABE SCHWARTZ

Waves crash over the seawall during the Storm of 1919.

The solution was not easily settled on. In 1921, local businessman Joseph Maurer proposed that a committee be formed to distribute weather bulletins to public entities, including the post office, fire stations, local newspapers and other downtown locations.

It had been only 20 years since the 1900 Storm, and Galvestonians wanted a more full-proof lifeline in the event of a disturbance in the Gulf.

Ten years later, in 1932, the Chamber enacted its plan: a representative of the weather bureau and Chamber volunteers would be stationed at the telephone company during threatening weather in order to provide information to residents. Their telephone alert system proved so popular that in 1933, the Chamber installed its own switchboard so that the weather committee could operate directly from the Chamber office.

Until radios and televisions entered the picture, and the alert system became archaic, Chamber switchboard operators often fielded thousands of calls during weather emergencies. They provided a vital service to the island in the form of expeditious and accurate information.

Though the switchboard was no longer active, the Chamber did provide an information service during Hurricane Carla. After the storm, Chamber President Charles Smith commended the volunteers who manned the information line during a 24-hour period leading up to the storm, giving callers vital advice on how to protect themselves and their property.

“Your willingness to spend all 24 hours of every day and night during this crisis at the Chamber in order to pass information along to those people who called and to protect the property of the chamber is greatly appreciated,” Smith said.

The next major storm to breach the tall banks of the city’s seawall occurred in the summer of 1983. In the days leading up to Hurricane Alicia’s arrival, Galveston Mayor Gus Manuel proceeded with a plan to evacuate low-lying areas on the island, which were not protected by the seawall. Manuel disagreed with the advice of Texas Gov. Mark White, who favored a more widespread evacuation order. Without a local mandate in place, 90 percent of residents living behind the seawall chose to remain on the island for the duration of the storm.

In the early morning hours of Aug. 18, Hurricane Alicia, a Category 3 hurricane, made landfall on the west end of the island near San Luis Pass with wind speeds of 115 miles per hour and spawned 14 tornadoes between Galveston and Houston alone. When the wind and water finally relented, 2,000 houses had been destroyed and 16,000 others damaged. All told, Alicia racked up a $3 billion tab.

Later that month, the U.S. House of Representatives held two hearings in Houston. The first hearing was to examine the effectiveness of the National Weather Service; the second focused on damage caused by the storm and recovery efforts. At the second hearing on Sept. 24, evidence was presented that demonstrated the need for infrastructure improvements to make Galveston more prepared for future weather events. The Galveston mayor praised the work of the weather service during Alicia — and stated his support for stronger building codes, which were under review at the time.

Over the next two decades, a host of tropical storms threatened Galveston Island — Jerry in 1989, Josephine in 1996, Francis in 1998 and Allison in 2001.

The city escaped largely unscathed by weather events until — only a few weeks after the 25th anniversary of Hurricane Alicia — the tropical depression that would strengthen into Hurricane Ike formed in the Gulf.

Before Ike hit, Galveston was on the precipice of an economic boom, with $2.6 billion in investment underway or in the pipeline, according to the Chamber.

Ike made landfall just after 2 a.m. on Sept. 13, inundating 75 percent of the island with its powerful storm surge and leaving 80 percent of structures on the island either damaged or destroyed.

Nine feet of water left the offices of the Galveston Chamber covered in a thick sludge. The scene was catastrophic — almost everything had been destroyed.

After the storm had passed, one of the first calls Chamber President Gina Spagnola made was to the U.S. Chamber of Commerce to ask for its guidance.

“My question was: Where do we go from here?,” Spagnola said. “They immediately had representatives from the Business Civic Leadership Center, a division of the U.S. Chamber, working with me on a recovery plan.”

Spagnola received calls from other chambers of commerce along the Gulf Coast, lending their advice and support.

It wasn’t yet safe for residents to return to the island.

Above: The neighborhood at 62nd Street and Avenue L in Galveston was devastated by storm surge from Hurricane Ike in 2008. Top: L&L Cigar and Candy Store employee Dorothy Johnson of Galveston stands among the rubble of the business after it was hit by a tornado spawned by Hurricane Alicia in 1983.

Spagnola remained in Arkansas, where she went to escape the storm, working long hours and keeping in near constant contact with Chamber staff and board members.

A recovery expo was planned.

"The idea was to get all of the resources in one spot," Spagnola said.

Just one month after Ike, Spagnola and her team staged an event with representatives from the Federal Emergency Management Agency, the Small Business Administration, the Department of Homeland Security, as well as many local organizations and businesses. It was a huge success.

Leadership at the Texas Chamber of Commerce took notice and the program received two awards.

What came out of the expo was bigger than awards.

"We realized after the expo that it was about more than that," Spagnola said. "We needed each other — to talk, to hug, to share our stories. We all needed support and a reason to keep going."

Three months after the storm, the Chamber, together with FEMA and the U.S. Small Business Association, put together another popular event — a free workshop for contractors and business owners who were interested in working with the federal government on recovery efforts. Participants learned how to effectively respond to bids, requests for proposal and requests for quotation.

Well-versed in what it takes to recover from a hurricane, Spagnola was appointed by the Business Civic Leadership Center of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce to serve as a member of the National Business Recovery Corps, which was created after 9/11.

After the debris was gone, what stuck most with Spagnola was the importance of giving back to the larger chambers of commerce community.

"I remember thinking: If and when we get through this, I will commit to helping others, because others helped us so much," she said.

True to its word, the Galveston Chamber sent truckloads of supplies to tornado-torn Moore, Oklahoma; helped organizations in fire-scorched Colorado; and, when Joplin, Missouri, was flattened by a tornado, Spagnola was the first person to reach out to the city's chamber president to see how Galveston could help.

It took a team to put the island back together after Hurricane Ike, and the Chamber was active in many aspects of the recovery process, leading the charge to facilitate a successful economic recovery strategy for the business community of Galveston Island.

In 2010, the Galveston Economic Development Partnership and the Chamber joined forces to create a unified effort focused on business recovery. Led by Jerry Mohn, chairman of the Chamber's Business Development Committee, the Business Recovery Task Force was aimed at resolving problems from Ike that still plagued the island, as well as developing a plan to expedite the response, recovery and rebuilding of Galveston's business community in the future.

Planning is key to being prepared for the next storm, and the Chamber has played an active role in a variety of recent strategic planning efforts including the city's comprehensive plan. The organization also has helped to implement the plan devised by Galveston's Long Term Recovery Committee, especially regarding tax base expansion, job creation and infrastructure improvements. ★

HERSTORY

WOMEN PLAY A ROLE IN SHAPING THE GALVESTON CHAMBER

The number of women with leadership roles in the Chamber today probably would have seemed unimaginable to the organization's founders, all of whom were men.

After all, the Galveston Regional Chamber of Commerce is the oldest in Texas, and was first chartered 75 years before women even secured the right to vote.

One of the first women employed by the Chamber was Emma Carnes, who was a librarian for the Galveston Mercantile Library, which preceded Rosenberg's endeavor on the island. Tasked with running the everyday activities of the first library in Texas was a busy job. She reported waiting on 75 people on May 4, 1871, only a few months after the library opened.

Women have been an integral part of some of the Chamber's most important movements in the 20th and 21st centuries. In February, 1913, the Chamber — which was rebranded as the Galveston Commercial Association in 1910 — joined with the Women's Health Protective Association to conduct a sanitation survey in Galveston. To lead the effort, they commissioned J. P. Simonds, head of the preventive medicine department at the University of Texas Medical Branch, who completed the survey within two months. He reported that Galveston lacked strong civic pride and recommended that the city enforce sanitary laws, pass a building ordinance, regularly inspect sources of the city's milk supply, provide regular medical examinations to schoolchildren, establish more playgrounds and eliminate breeding places for mosquitoes. Armed with the results of the sanitation survey, the WHPA successfully lobbied the city to appoint a dairy inspector and a building inspector and to pass ordinances regulating grocery stores and bakeries and requiring property owners and lessors to be responsible for maintaining clean sidewalks and alleys abutting their property. The women also formed watchdog committees to ensure enforcement of the new ordinances.

One of the first mentions of female Chamber members occurred in The Galveston Daily News in 1931. Invitations to attend the organization's quarterly meeting, where members would appoint committee chairs discuss a new civic plan, were "extended to women members of the Chamber and wives of members," according to the article.

Clockwise from below: Betty Schocke, 1982 Chamber chair, hands the ship's wheel and a plaque to new Chamber chair, Roland Bassett. Schocke was the first woman to be elected Chamber chair; Rachel Nunn served as the Galveston Chamber's cashier and bookkeeper from the 1950s to 1970s; Darlene Hanson worked for the Galveston Chamber for more than 20 years. She served as president of the organization from 1986-88; Cindy Schulz joined the Chamber staff in 1991 and served in various roles until becoming president in 1999.

In 1964, the same year Title VII of the Civil Rights Act, which prohibited sex discrimination in employment, passed, the Chamber held a membership drive specifically geared at increasing female participation. At the time, there were 911 members; 40 were women.

Just like the men, they paid dues, a minimum of $72 annually; they either played vital roles in their husbands' businesses or managed businesses of their own; and, their goals were generally in step with those of their male counterparts: they wanted to see economic growth in Galveston.

For Chamber manager Ivan Elmer, the drive to volunteer, not a person's gender, was the important thing.

"The Chamber employs a staff to execute the work of the committees, but it is the volunteer work of the men and women of commerce that is essential," Elmer said.

While researching a story on the Chamber's "women's movement," Elizabeth Mays, a reporter for the Galveston News Tribune, asked Chamber staff about the role of the feminine minority in the organization.

"Just the same as the men," Chamber cashier Rachel Nunn said, adding that all Chamber members — men and women — were invited to join one of the 24 working committees of the organization.

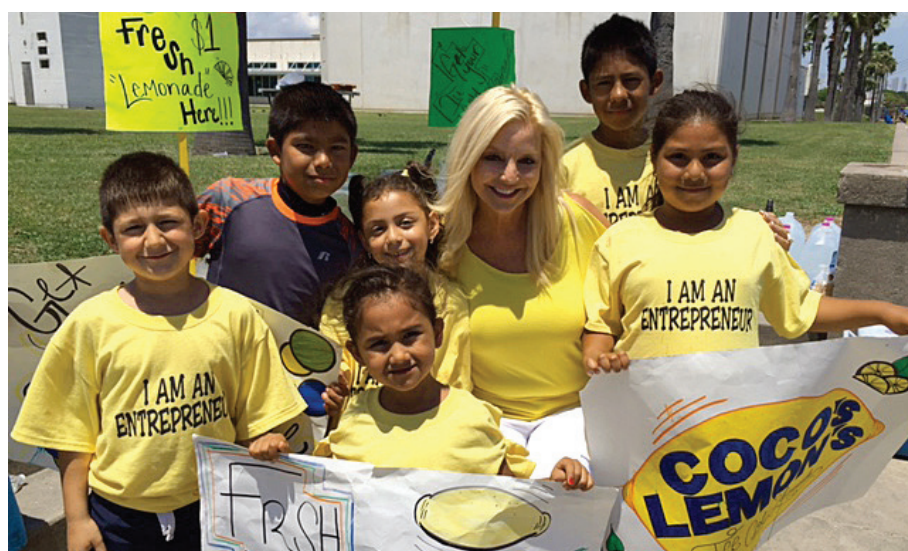

Etta Schuh, Rose Farmer and Nina Serio were actively involved in the Chamber, serving as leaders of the city beautification committee. Farmer was the first woman chairman to head the project, with Serio and Schuh later co-chairing the committee. Together, the women had launched the cleanup phase of a large-scale improvement program for Galveston, which was aimed at reducing litter, improving city parkway areas and planting oleanders. Schuh also assisted her husband, a professional photographer, in developing a library of promotional photos of local tourist attractions for the Chamber to use.

In her story, Mays concluded that there was a job to be done, and women were needed as much as men to carry them out.

Chamber leaders maintained this position in the years to come, and Gina Spagnola served for less than a year as vice president of the Galveston Chamber before becoming president in 2004. Her tenure features many formidable achievements, including bringing Lemonade Day to Galveston in 2012. The young entrepreneur program has grown to include more than 1,000 Galveston County children each year.

continued to develop new programs geared at women.

In 1970, one of the Chamber's "Eight Major Missions" was "membership participation," which aimed at creating a women's division to develop "woman power" in programs of community improvement and in the early 1980s, the organization's female faction saw a few important benchmarks.

After working at the Chamber for 12 years, Darlene Hanson was promoted from administrative assistant to the organization's assistant manager in 1981, and in 1986, she was named its executive vice president.

A few months after Hanson received her first promotion, Betty Schocke became the first female to be elected president, a position that is referred to today as chair. A pioneer and a role model for women in Galveston in the years to come, Schocke was deeply invested in the island's future, and a hardworking businesswoman.

Being elected Chamber chairwoman was not even her first "first." In 1976, Schocke had been made regional manager of Manpower Staffing Services, the first woman to hold that role in the Gulf Coast area.

"I'm not trying to prove that women are better than men ... I'm just interested in becoming a good manager for the company," Schocke said in a story published in The Daily News.

Another Galveston woman, Cindy Schulz joined the Chamber staff in 1991 and served in various roles until becoming president in 1999.

In 1993, the Chamber and the University of Texas Medical Branch co-sponsored the first Minority Business Informational Seminar and Expo, which drew a number of women. In his keynote address, Dr. Floyd Rose, of the Wisconsin Supplier Development Council, compelled major corporations to do more business with minorities — an inspiring message for those in attendance.

"The Galveston Chamber of Commerce and UTMB are to be commended for an expo that was long overdue in the Galveston community," Ishmael Robles, a Chamber committee member, wrote in an op-ed to The Daily News.

Gina Spagnola joined the Chamber in 2003 and became president in 2004. Her tenure at the helm has resulted in many formidable achievements, including the inauguration of an annual women's conference — Celebrate Women: Mind, Body, Spirit — which is put on by the Chamber and the medical branch.

First held in 2007, the fun-filled festival of females has continued to give women, both local and not, an opportunity to come together with coworkers, best friends and family members to listen, learn, dine, shop and celebrate.

"Women come here to be empowered, to take control of their lives, to educate themselves on health, and to be with women who lift them up," Spagnola said.

Spagnola also produced a recovery expo just two months after Hurricane Ike struck in 2008. The expo won both state and national awards. ★

WOMEN CHAMBER LEADERS

Women now make up the majority of new college graduates, new advanced degree holders in medicine, law, veterinary medicine and dentistry, among others. According to a study released in 2019, there's another field where women are moving into the majority: chambers of commerce leadership.

The share of chamber of commerce staff leadership in women's hands rose from 41 percent in 1986 to 63 percent in 2019.

By 2019, 47 of the 50 states and the District of Columbia had more women chamber leaders than men, where in 1986, only five states — Mississippi, Arizona, Nebraska, Oregon, Washington, and Wyoming — had more women than men in charge.

So, why the increase in women's leadership?

"This is coming from the grassroots," said Chris Mead, president of Magicians of Main Street, the firm that conducted the study.

"It's happened with no apparent coordination from anybody," he said "And it seems to have welled up from the smallest chambers first."

The number of female-led metropolitan chambers of commerce also has grown significantly over the past 40 years — from 3 percent in 1986 to 36 percent in 2019, according to the study.

"There's no reason to expect we will not find yet more women leading large chambers of commerce down the road," Mead said. "Business leaders specifically, and people in general, have become accustomed to the idea of women taking charge of enterprises of all sizes, including chambers of commerce."

GALVESTON REGIONAL CHAMBER

FEBRUARY 1845 – On the last day of the Ninth Congress at Washington on the Brazos, Hugh McLeod secures passage of a bill that incorporates the Galveston Chamber of Commerce until 1865, making it one of the first chambers in Texas.

1846 – In the same year Texas is annexed to the United States, a market house and hospital open in Galveston. An auditorium above the market house hosted citywide entertainment, including plays, orations and concerts.

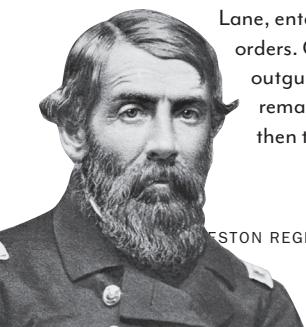

The Ball, Hutchings & Co. Building on Avenue B.

1858 – Under the direction of Joseph Kauffman, the Chamber inaugurates a vigorous campaign to install an iron front on every store in the city. Iron fronts were accepted during the late 1850s as a symbol of progress and prosperity.

FEBRUARY 1861 – Despite the city's prosperity, residents vote 765 to 33 in favor of secession from the United States.

APRIL 19, 1861 – President Lincoln enacts a Proclamation of Blockade against southern ports. Galveston is unprepared for any attack by sea. The Confederate forces in the city are fortunate, however, because the U.S. fleet has only 42 warships to blockade the entire southern coast. Shipping continued almost as before because blockade runners transported cotton to Havana and other ports, and then returned with military supplies and consumer goods.

OCT. 4, 1862 – After months of tense relations, federal forces launch an assault on Galveston. William B. Renshaw, commander of the Union gunboat Harriet Lane, enters Galveston Harbor with surrender orders. Gunfire is exchanged, but the city was outgunned. A four-day truce allows the remaining civilians to be evacuated, and then the city surrenders.

JAN. 1, 1863 – The Battle of Galveston. Early New Year's Day, Maj. Gen. John B. Magruder leads Confederate forces in a battle fought on land and sea. With 26 of his men killed and 117 wounded, Magruder retakes Galveston. Union losses include the captured infantry and the Harriet Lane and about 150 casualties on the naval ships, including Union Cmdr. William B. Renshaw, who is killed trying to scuttle the Westfield to keep it out of Confederate hands. The port remains under Confederate control until 1865, when the war ends.

The Capture of Galveston – The blowing up of the U.S. Gunboat Westfield (and destruction of Cmdr. William B. Renshaw and his boat's crew) while aground on Pelican Island, Galveston Harbor, to prevent her falling into the hands of the Confederates, Jan. 1, 1863.

JUNE 19, 1865 – Juneteenth. Union Maj. Gen. Gordon Granger lands at Galveston, raises a flag symbolizing the restoration of Union control, and proclaims freedom for the slaves. Since then, the day has been celebrated as a holiday in the state of Texas.

1873 – The Chamber establishes a committee to combat the Yellow Fever Epidemic. The organization appoint a commission of five individuals who are tasked with investigating, understanding and attempting to combat the epidemic.

1875 – Twenty-five years before the 1900 Storm, William Pitt Ballinger, one of the early members of Mills Shirley, a longtime Chamber member, recognizes Galveston's vulnerability to the unpredictable sea and proposes that the city construct a seawall.

Electric Pavilion, circa 1881. It's the first building to have electric lights. It burned down Aug. 1, 1883.

APRIL 1881 – Galveston is chosen as the site for the state's 13th annual Saengerfest. The event is expected to draw thousands of visitors to the island, and a new pavilion at 21st Street and the beach is built specifically for the occasion. Designed by local architect Nicholas Clayton, the attractive frame building is the first public structure in Galveston to be lit entirely by electricity. After Saengerfest, the building is renamed “Electric Pavilion” and becomes a symbol of the growing resort industry on the Texas coast. It continues to operate as a venue for entertainment, musical performances and other events until a fire destroys the pavilion August 1883.

1885 – The Great Fire. When the flames subside, a 100-acre swath of Galveston Island, including 568 houses, has burned to the ground.

NOVEMBER 1893 – A new bridge is constructed connecting Galveston Island to the mainland — this one for the use of horse-drawn wagons. Before the new bridge is constructed, the only way for people to reach Galveston was by train or boat.

WINTER 1896 – A winter storm leaves Galveston Island under as much as 15 inches of snow in some places.

1890

SEPT. 8, 1900 – The Great Storm sweeps ashore with winds estimated at up to 140 mph and a storm surge of nearly 16 feet. While an exact death toll isn't known, it is estimated that 6,000 to 8,000 of the island's 37,000 residents perished.

1900

The construction of the seawall, circa 1907.

1904 – After the Great Storm, the city literally lifts itself up. Over the next several years, city leaders construct a seawall and raise the level of 500 city blocks.

GALVESTON REGIONAL CHAMBER

1910 – The Chamber's Cotton Carnival is extended from one week to two and includes an expanded arts and crafts show, an aquarium, cooking demonstrations, an automobile race and fireworks show. The onset of World War I ultimately leads to the demise of this local festival.

Cotton Carnival Parade, circa 1910.

MAY 1, 1911 – The Galveston Chamber of Commerce, Galveston Business League and Galveston Publicity Committee merge to form the Galveston Commercial Association (GCA).

SEPT. 28, 1912 – GCA wants to make Galveston the best lighted city in the United States. The organization partners with Brush Electric Co. to erect a 60-foot sign at 25th Street and Seawall that reads "Galveston/The Treasure Island of America/Port and Playground/Growing Greater Grandeur."

Marching drills at Camp Crockett, circa 1914.

1914-1918 – World War I. Galveston's Fort Crockett serves as a U.S. Army artillery training center. Eight doctors from the University of Texas Medical Branch leave the island to serve their country in the war.

1910

1930

APRIL 18, 1929 –

The Chamber is one of the sponsors of the International Pageant of Pulchritude. A story on the event is published in Field & Stream.

1930 – The Chamber donates $60,000 to buy site for new "psychopathic hospital."

MAY 7, 1937 – The Galveston Commercial Association is renamed Galveston Chamber of Commerce.

AUG. 21, 1937 – Distribution of a special insignia adopted by the Chamber's information bureau will be placed at various locations for the benefit of tourists. This program is slated to begin shortly, according to Walter Shook, chairman of the committee in charge.

JAN. 20, 1939 – The Chamber begins advocating for municipal ownership of the wharves; voters approve in 1940.

Miss Austria Lisl Goldarbeiter is crowned Miss Universe, circa 1929.

The Badgett sisters in 1940.

FEB. 1, 1939 – Quadruplet girls are born to the Badgett family of Galveston. It's the second surviving set of quadruplets in the United States and the city is thrust into the national spotlight. Enthralled with the publicity, the Chamber provides the Badgett family with four bassinets.

OF COMMERCE – FIRST 175 YEARS

1939-1945 – World War II. Focus at Galveston's Fort Crockett is placed on defense against German U-boats. The fort also serves as a prisoner of war camp. The Galveston Municipal Airport is redesignated a U.S. Army Air Corps base and named Galveston Army Air Field. The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, using funds made available by Congress through the Civil Aeronautics Authority, constructs three 6,000-foot-long, hard-surface runways to accommodate army aircraft. The military installation officially deactivated on Nov. 15, 1945, with ownership reverting to the city.

Artillery drill at Fort Crockett, circa 1940.

MARCH 17, 1944 – The Chamber makes the final payment on the Badgett family's home in Galveston. The Badgett quadruplets — Geraldine, Joan, Jeanette, and Joyce — are minor celebrities at this point. The Chamber raised the money to build the family a two-story house, but there was a catch. According to minutes from a 1944 meeting, the Badgetts had to agree to let visitors into their home for several hours each day so the public could meet the quadruplets and take pictures with them.

1948 – The Chamber publishes the popular "Guide to Galveston" for visitors.

FEB. 25, 1949 – The Chamber organizes "the finest Mardi Gras Texas has ever seen."

1940

1960

SEPT. 24, 1955 – The board of the Galveston Chamber calls for an end to the open flaunting of state and federal laws. The directors, in a written statement handed reporters after a closed session, demanded that every step be taken to carry out and enforce the laws to "further the ideal of making Galveston a law abiding and safe community." Their position seems to counter that of the city's mayor, Roy Clough, who had been elected only months before on a platform to segregate Galveston prostitutes in a recognized red-light district and to allow "honest" gambling.

MAY 23, 1958 – Chamber President Edward Schreiber is instrumental in the creation of Texas A&M University in Galveston.

SEPT. 10, 1961 – The Chamber advertises its emergency information service the day before Hurricane Carla makes landfall.

Damage from Hurricane Carla, circa 1961.

APRIL 1963 – Plans for a month-long Galveston Splash Day celebration to replace the present three-day affair are announced. In a joint statement, the Chamber and the Galveston Tourist and Convention Bureau said the extended celebration would give more people an opportunity to visit Galveston and should prevent overcrowding and disorderly outbreaks that had marred some three-day celebrations in the past.

Students from Irving arrive in Galveston for Splash Day, circa 1963.

GALVESTON REGIONAL CHAMBER

APRIL 1969 – Project Square Deal, the Chamber's new program in support of minority-owned businesses in Galveston, goes into effect.

FEB. 2, 1970 – The Chamber's 125th annual banquet is held at Moody Civic Center. John A. Volpe, U.S. Secretary of Transportation and a former three-term governor of Massachusetts, is the featured speaker.

FEBRUARY 1973 – Housing is a major issue in the Chamber's 1973 program. The organization pledges to keep the attention of Galveston "focused on this serious and costly problem"; to continue to seek land on which living units of all kinds can be built; to attract both local and outside investment in the production of housing of all kinds; seek methods of cooperative promotion for the sale of such units; and urge investigation of design ideas to effectively utilize land surface available on the island.

NOVEMBER 1974 – In celebration of the American Bicentennial, the Chamber commissions the design of three souvenir items: a map of the old Galveston port; a medallion with Jean Lafitte on one side and a map of "Jean Lafitte's Galveston" on the other side; and a bronze statue of the famous pirate.

SEPTEMBER 1976 – Chamber officials go on a tour of 15 Texas cities in an effort to "sell Galveston." Dale Ware, chairman of the Chamber's Sell Galveston committee says the trip was a great success. "The purpose of the trip was to expose the leadership of other areas to the progress and potential of the island from both a business and tourist destination standpoint," he said.

1990

1984 – Leadership Galveston is created by the Galveston Chamber. Its goal is to create a pipeline of future leaders for the city. The program set out to accomplish four major objectives: to identify and motivate future leaders; to acquaint them with issues and challenges affecting the community; to offer various processes and options for answering challenges identified; and to motivate potential leaders for active community involvement.

Susan Broll, Joyce Smith, Chairman John Pickelman, Roger McReynolds and Ann McAfee participate in the Leadership Galveston program in 1985.

OCT. 19, 1986 – A new adopt-a-school project sponsored by the Chamber begins. Designed to establish a close relationship between a business and a school, the program is aimed at providing Galveston schools with a variety of supportive services and advice, including speakers to talk with students about career fields, tours of work sites, and technical and non-technical demonstrations. Businesses also could sponsor drama, art, science and music organizations, athletic events and others. The program brochure concluded: "Education makes good business sense."

MARCH 1987 – The Let's Market Galveston conference is held at the San Luis Hotel. Its purpose is to establish common goals, objectives and a direction for the city. The day-long event includes workshops specific to various segments of the Galveston business community.

APRIL 5, 1991 – The Chamber hosts a Legislative Breakfast at the Hotel Galvez, giving the Galveston community an opportunity to meet with the elected officials who represent them in Austin.

JUNE 10, 1995 – The Chamber revives a classic event — the Miss Galvie Stone Bathing Beauty Review — on the beach at 23rd and Seawall Boulevard.

OF COMMERCE – FIRST 175 YEARS

MAY 10, 2000 – The Opportunity Crossing business expo, hosted by the Chamber, is held at Moody Gardens. It provides an opportunity for local businesses to display their products and services and network with other businesses and prospective customers.

JULY 2003 – In a joint effort with United Way, the Chamber hosts a four-part lecture series, called Lunch and Learn, to address the concerns and challenges facing elderly and their caregivers. The series provided important information about resources, services and opportunities available for seniors and their caregivers.

JANUARY 2005 – The Galveston-Trivandrum Sister City Society and the Chamber initiate a project to aid children who lost their parents to the recent tsunami and children who are displaced or abandoned by their family due to this natural disaster. The Chamber planned to forward the funds raised to the Consulate of India and the Chief Minister's Disaster Relief Fund.

2007 – Dr. Ben Raimer begins his term as chairman of the board of directors of the Chamber. He leads the almost 800-member chamber through a transition that sees the resignation of its entire 42-member board of directors in order to appoint a smaller board of 12 voting members. In the transition, the Chamber takes on a more active position in advocating for businesses.

Debris from homes demolished by storm surge from Hurricane Ike is piled several feet deep in the Spanish Grant subdivision on Galveston's West End.

Sept. 13, 2008 – Hurricane Ike makes landfall on the East End of Galveston as a Category 2 storm bringing a storm surge as high as 20 feet on Bolivar Peninsula. Damage is estimated at $29.52 billion in the United States. Thirteen fatalities are reported in Galveston and Chambers counties.

OCTOBER 2011 – The Chamber begins endorsing local candidates, expanding its role in Galveston politics.

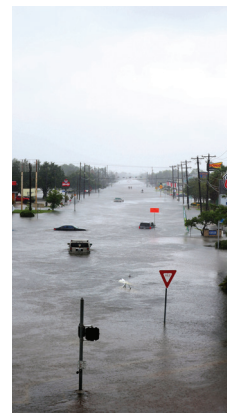

2012 – Motivated by its education committee, the Chamber purchases the licensing fee to bring Lemonade Day to Galveston County.

MAY 20, 2013 – A tornado strikes Moore, Oklahoma, leaving thousands homeless and in need of everyday necessities. The Galveston Chamber organizes with other chambers throughout the country to pitch in with the relief effort.

SEPTEMBER 2016 – The Chamber joins other business organizations and trade groups in a lawsuit challenging the White House's white-collar overtime rule. Its decision to join the lawsuit was a result of feedback from its nearly 900 members, including from representatives of the hotel and motel industry, Chamber President Gina Spagnola said. "It adversely affects their ability to do business," she said.

Aug. 25, 2017 – Hurricane Harvey makes landfall in Rockport, about 200 miles south of Galveston County, as a Category 4 storm. The hurricane moves up the coast and stalls over the Houston area, where it drops unprecedented amounts of rain. In Friendswood, officials recorded 56 inches of rain over a six-day period. The storm costs an estimated $125 billion in damage, behind only Hurricane Katrina at $161 billion. More than 300,000 structures are flooded, as are up to 500,000 cars.

Floodwaters from Hurricane Harvey flow down FM 517 in Dickinson.

JAN. 31, 2020 – The Chamber hosts its 175th Annual Meeting and Legacy Ball at the Galveston Island Convention Center. The Galveston-Texas City Pilots, the Port of Galveston and The Daily News are named Legacy Award recipients and recognized for being the first members of the chamber since its inception.
